

Mr Bowler

My Dear Sir,

A favor of the 8th came duly to hand: Unfortunately I had no acquaintance with Mr Saxe - indeed do not remember now to have seen him
- nor am I at all familiar with his writings. Now all I give all the "counts" against myself - as if enough were not already understood to cheapen my aptitude for current literary topics: However I shall some day send you something
- was it only to balance the "paper-banking" which I am glad you have kept "going". The new class of type is a great gain, which your absence re variety of material certainly mented.

V^y much
